

Dreamspeaker Programme

“At the moment I am working on another project that I call the Dreamspeaker Programme. It involves conditioning consciousness so that the dreamer might not only bring waking consciousness into the dreamstate, but also bring dreaming consciousness into the waking state.

“This project is still in its early stages, but already the preliminary findings suggest several interesting potential ramifications. The ASC known as out of body experiences suggests that it is possible to ‘see’ and ‘hear’ without using the physical organs. We seem to have found that it may be possible to alter consciousness so that while the eyes and ears are blocked from perception, the subject can ‘see’ and ‘hear.’ More, this seems to be a learned skill that is more readily facilitated by initially training the subject in lucid dreaming.

Another area being explored involves access to other than conscious information while in the dreamstate or in an ASC. There is reason to believe that an incredible source of information is available to the dreamer. To date our work suggests information as varied as personal health data and stock market fluctuations. The bent of the information received seems to depend on the interests of the dreamer (to a large extent, but not exclusively.)”
