

Letters to the Editor

Celia Green Solicits Help

Dear Editor;

I have been commissioned to write a book on lucid dreams and I should be most grateful to hear from any readers of Lucidity Letter who have had particularly interesting lucid dreams, of which they could send accounts which they would be prepared to have quoted. The projected book is one for the general reader, so interesting illustrations are of more importance than statistical considerations

I should be grateful if anyone sending accounts of their experiences could also kindly state their age and position in life (both now and at the time of the experience), so that they may be briefly characterized for the interest of the reader. Please also indicate whether or not you wish your name to be concealed.

Topics which are of particular interest for the purposes of this book include the following:

examples and methods of nightmare control by means of lucidity; lucid dreams and control of nightmares in young children;
problem solving, healing, learning skills;
apparent ESP, telepathy or precognition in lucid dreams;
dreams which have had definite beneficial effects - whether psychological, physical, or other;
methods of induction of lucid dreams, and their effect on dream content.

ONIROS Role in 1987 European Meeting

Dear Editor;

In your "Letter from the Editor" prefacing the last issue of Lucidity Letter, I was unpleasantly surprised to read that the symposium on Lucid Dream Research which took place at Frankfurt last October (1987), and whose proceedings are published in your review, was organized by Mr. Christian Stephan

Although it is true that Mr. Stephan participated in the organization of this symposium, it seems totally inexact and unjust to pass over in silence the important role of the association ONIROS - which I have the honor of presiding - not only concerning the very conception and launching of this event, but also for the work devoted to its accomplishment, and in particular the invitation of Alan Worsley, Christian Bouchet and Oliver Clerc as speakers

Roger Ripert

President of ONIROS; Vice-President of European Association for the Study of Dreams
